

Okay. Just had a fantastic ad. Brainwave. In my bag right now. Uh, obviously following everything we've said. Nice, uh, comedic 15-second ad. A young guy does a clean reverse into a parking space. There's an old man in a car next to him. He looks shocked. Like gosh, why is he driving like that? Old man says you thinking speeding about like a boy racer makes you a good driver? Young Driver mucks and chuckles and says am I a Boy racer or or just not a good driver old man makes another Kuye camera Cuts back to young man who smoothly shows his home screen as a driver told me and killed him killed the old man comedic angle British set though I'm thinking you know whipping the car into a tax space on an out of town trip to Gloucestershire or even better a little Asian kid within the car into tax space you know in what's that road in commercial Street in East Justin in front of our old White man that's the you know cocky man that runs a stall or something yeah in fact if it's the cocky man make him even drop the fish on the floor just cause he he panicked this is a Braine but you get the gist make this sort of out out Line

DRIIVA 15-SECOND AD TREATMENT

Title: "Boy Racer"

Concept

Young driver smoothly reverses into tight parking spot on Commercial Street, East London. Market vendor assumes they're reckless. Driver reveals Driiva app score. Vendor drops fish in shock. Generational stereotype flipped. Comedic, warm, very British.

Script

SCENE: Commercial Street, Shoreditch – daytime, bustling market

0:00-0:03

Wide shot: Young Asian driver (20s, clean hatchback) whips car backwards into tight taxi rank space between two vans. One smooth motion. Confident.

0:04-0:07

Cut to: Cocky white market vendor (50s, apron, holding wrapped fish) watching from his stall, 3 meters away. Face: shock, then disapproval. Shakes head.

VENDOR: (loud, mockingly) "Alright, Lewis Hamilton! Speedin' about like a boy racer don't make you a good driver, mate."

0:08-0:10

Cut back to: Young driver, half out of car, door open. Grins, unbothered. Slight eyebrow raise.

DRIVER: (calm, cheeky) "Boy racer? Or just... not a bad driver?"

0:11-0:13

Close-up: Driver holds up phone. Driiva app home screen visible—big green "Safety Score: 94" in glassmorphic UI. Camera lingers.

0:14-0:15

Cut to vendor: Eyes widen. Fish slips from his hands, hits pavement with wet slap. Beat. He looks at camera, embarrassed grin.

SUPER (on-screen text):

"Drive well. Get money back. Driiva."

END.

Production Notes

Location: Commercial Street (Shoreditch) near Spitalfields Market or Brick Lane – busy, authentic East London energy. Real market stalls, real foot traffic in background (ask for releases or blur faces).

Casting:

- Young driver: British-Asian male, early 20s, confident but not arrogant. Natural comedic timing. Should feel like someone's younger brother, not an actor.

- Market vendor: White British male, 50s, working-class London accent (East End), the type who's run a stall for 30 years and has banter with everyone. Warm underneath the mockery—think "cheeky but harmless."

Vehicles: Clean, modest hatchback (Fiesta, Polo, Corsa). Not flashy. Reinforces "normal young driver, not boy racer" message.

Tone:

- Documentary feel—handheld, natural light, real location
- Comedic but not slapstick; the humor comes from subverted expectations
- Warm ending—vendor's embarrassed grin shows it's all in good fun
- No forced acting; feels like a real interaction you'd see on a London street

Visual style:

- Subtle VHS grain in post (analog aesthetic from brand guide)
- No music until final beat—just ambient market noise, car sounds, dialogue
- Final frame: clean Driiva logo + tagline over freeze of vendor's face

Key beats:

1. Skillful driving (but looks aggressive to outsider)
2. Older person's snap judgment
3. Young driver's calm confidence
4. Phone reveal (proof via app score)
5. Physical comedy (dropped fish) + generational humility

Why This Works for Driiva

- Flips stereotype: Young drivers aren't reckless—data proves it
- ERG/app as hero: The phone screen is the punchline; the score speaks for itself
- Diverse, real casting: Challenges "boy racer" trope, shows Driiva is for everyone
- Very British: Market banter, class/generational tension, self-deprecating humor at the end
- Documentary authenticity: Real London location, real market, real humans
- 15 seconds = cheap, shareable: Perfect for TikTok/IG Reels, pre-roll ads
- Community subtext: Vendor represents old insurance industry assumptions; young driver represents data-driven fairness

Alternate Ending (if fish drop feels too broad)

Instead of fish drop:

0:14-0:15

Vendor pauses, looks at phone, back at driver. Slow nod of respect.

VENDOR: (quieter, genuine) "Fair play, son."

Driver winks. Gets in car.

SUPER: "Drive well. Get money back. Driiva."

Shot List

1. Wide establishing – Commercial Street, market bustle, car approaching (0:00-0:02)
2. Medium shot – Car reversing into space, smooth motion (0:02-0:03)
3. Close-up – Vendor's face, shock to disapproval (0:04-0:05)
4. Medium shot – Vendor at stall, holding fish, delivers line (0:05-0:07)
5. Medium shot – Driver, half out of car, grins, delivers line (0:08-0:10)
6. Close-up – Phone screen, Driiva app, score visible (0:11-0:13)
7. Wide/medium – Vendor, fish drops, embarrassed grin (0:14-0:15)
8. Title card – "Drive well. Get money back. Driiva." (0:15)

Distribution Plan

- Paid: TikTok/IG Reels pre-roll, geo-targeted London 18-35
- Organic: Post on Driiva TikTok, X, IG with caption: "When the data speaks louder than stereotypes."
- PR angle: "Insurtech challenges 'boy racer' myth with data" – pitch to City AM, Sifted, TechCrunch UK

Budget Estimate (Low-Cost Guerrilla Shoot)

- Location fee (market stall vendor, half-day): £200-500
- Talent (2 actors, non-union, day rate): £400-800
- Crew (director, 1-2 camera ops, sound): £800-1,200
- Props (fish, stall dressing): £50-100
- Post (edit, grade, VHS grain, sound mix): £300-500
- Total: £1,750-3,100

Risk Mitigation

- Stereotype sensitivity: Casting avoids caricature; vendor is cheeky but not mean, driver is confident but not smug. Test with diverse focus group pre-launch.
- Fish drop too slapstick?: Shoot both endings (fish + respectful nod); A/B test in paid media.
- Location permits: Secure Commercial Street filming permit or find similar market willing to trade for brand exposure.

This is tight, punchy, very "London starter insurer meets BBC comedy," and gives you a repeatable format: young driver does something skillful → older person/stereotype reacts → Driiva score proves them wrong. Could become a series ("Boy Racer", "Girl Racer", "Sunday Driver", etc.).
